SUPPOSED DUMB MAN ACTUALLY DOES CONVERSE

"Tell me, how on earth did you get a deaf and dumb man to talk, to answer questions?" was the greeting a Star-Bulletin reporter got when he entered the office of the city treasurer, D. L. Conkling, yesterday. "The Statue Worshipper hasn't spoken for 20 years, not even to his own family."

The only answer that could be given was, "I don't know." John F. Haley, internal revenue collector, was present during the conversation with the weird Portuguese who has stood silently watching the gilded statue in front of the Judiciary building for nearly 20 years. Conkling declared that he has heard numerous comments on the story of the conversation which appeared in Monday afternoon's paper and they were all of a doubting nature. He called up Haley, on the suggestion of the man who wrote the story, and obtained confirmation of the talk.

"Well, I can't explain it," he declared, turning from the telephone. "I said 'good morning' to him religiously every day for six or seven years and got nothing but a vacant stare for a reply. And I have been told that his own mother hasn't heard his voice for many years."

POLICE NOTES

Jim Collins will be tried in police court on June 21 on an accusation of running an auto while under the influence of liquor on Kamehameha Day.

Jane Barton will be tried in court a week from today on a charge of selling drinks in Twiwi without a license. According to the police the defendant tried to bribe the arresting officer with $20.

Carlo Santos, accused of an assault on John Revels in Kaulaue lane last Sunday with a knife, will be heard in Judge Monsarrat's court next Monday. A similar charge against an alleged accomplice of Santos' was retaken this morning.

Most of the Ah Foe family, including C. Ah Foe, Mrs. Ah Foe and Miriam Ah Foe, were brought into court this morning accused of making unnecessary and objectionable noises last night on Asylum road. The trouble arose from a feud with a neighbor, according to the police. The case will be heard Monday.

John August was arraigned before

Judge Monsarrat today on a statutory charge against a part-Hawaiian 14-year-old girl, Anna Kelly. The defendant at first waived hearing and was committed to the circuit court, but later obtained an attorney and asked for a hearing in police court next Friday. The judge granted his request and set aside the commitment.

There were four chiefs defendants in court this morning, three Chinese and one Japanese. All the cases went over to next Tuesday morning. Ah Sam and Ah Kwai made no pleas. The latter is accused of conducting a game. Tanaka, the Japanese, pleaded guilty. Ah Fong was also accused of conducting a game, a much more serious charge than simply having a chefa ticket in possession.

J. A. McIntosh, who tried to commit suicide recently, was released from jail today on his own recognizance until Friday, when he will have a hearing in the police court. In the meantime his actions will be watched closely to determine whether there is danger in permitting him to run at large. He is charged as a public nuisance because it is said he threatened to do a "good job" when he got out of jail.

One of the most brutal assaults ever called to the attention of the police was the prosecution's opinion in the case of John J. Fenton, who was fined $100 in police court today for beating up Rosal Goldstein in Twiwi. The defendant was a marine on the transport Sherman, which visited here recently and will probably have to serve out his fine. The woman has been in the hospital and was so bruised about the face that she could hardly tell her story on the stand this morning. Fenton's excuse was self-defense.
